

Sacha DeVelle has a PhD in Linguistics from the University of Queensland, Australia. She currently works as a researcher for Cambridge University and is the founder of ‘Cambridge to Africa’, a not-for-profit organisation set up with the aim of providing fundraising and research initiatives for African and Latin American based projects. Sacha is the Editor-in-Chief for The Itupale Online Journal of African Studies, a research initiative supported by Cambridge to Africa. The primary aim of the journal is to provide an open publishing platform for African scholars residing in Africa and Latin America. Sacha has published in the areas of language processing, language testing and educational assessment. She has presented widely in both her academic field and the humanitarian work carried out by Cambridge to Africa.